Probation in Europe: 32 probation services in almost 1200 pages

No less than 32 European probation services are presented in Probation in Europe. "We needed almost 1200 pages", says professor Van Kalmthout, the main editor of the very comprehensive comparative study. Its predecessor Probation and probation services, has been highly successful in the development of probation services in Europe. "I am convinced that Probation in Europe will even have more impact."

European cooperation of probation services on the way

Probation is on the move in Europe. "The probation point of view to all kinds of legal decisions and regulations is heard better and better on the European level", says CEP Secretary General Leo Tigges. "Take for example the upcoming EU legislation on probation. This will undoubtedly lead to more cooperation between the different European probation services, which simply requires a comprehensive reference book like Probation in Europe."

Reference book or page turner?

All chapters in Probation in Europe have been written in a single format by national or regional experts, like senior officials of probation services, university professors or high-ranking civil servants. Gerhard Ploeg is the author of the Norwegian country report. "This book does more justice to the seriousness of the subject than having a stack of photocopies, or even a website."

Germany and France explore (European) cooperation in probation

'German-French cooperation in the supervision of suspended sentences' was the subject of the seminar held on the 26th and 27th of June by the Euro-Institut in Kehl, Germany. The seminar not only served as a platform for professionals working in the German-French border region, but also provided an opportunity to discuss the transposition of the Framework Decision into national law.

Financed through national collection in the Netherlands

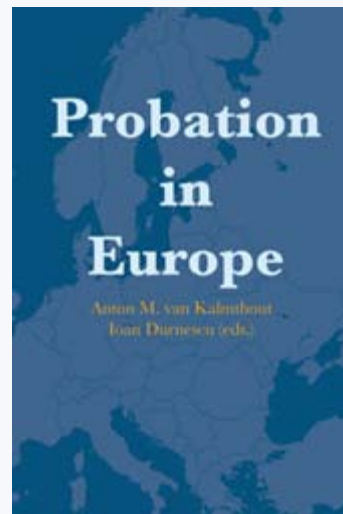

It would not have been possible to publish Probation in Europe without the financial contribution of the Dutch National Probation Action (Nationale Reclasserings Actie - NRA). President Jeppe Balkema explains why the NRA made the budget available. "A book like this is a source of inspiration for everyone working in the field of probation."
