Arbitration in Sport

To increase their autonomy vis-à-vis states, sport organisations have chosen to make use of arbitration, particularly in order to settle any disputes which they may have with their members, such as cases in which they contest disciplinary decisions taken against them.

This preference for arbitration makes it possible, to a very broad extent, for sport organisations to escape the jurisdiction of state courts.

Special Investigation Techniques

Drawing on various international and regional instruments, SITs comprise a number of investigative techniques, such as:

- surveillance, including interception of communication
- covert investigations (i.e. undercover agents)
- controlled delivery
- informants
- Joint Investigation Teams (JITs)
- witness protection

The adjudication of some SITs (notably surveillance (viewed broadly) and covert investigations, have resulted in landmark jurisprudence, notably by the European Court of Human Rights.
